“THE RETURN”

"The Return"

Continuing along the David Lynch-directed TV series "Twin Peaks", the third season sees Lynch creating dreams with dreams, where the past is the future and the future is the past, repeatedly underlining the non-linearity of time. Black lodge and white lodge are no long just abstract origins of good and evil. After 25 years, the details buried in the first two seasons are revealed like a Möbius strip, where the end of the labyrinth is the start to another.

The nuclear explosion opens the pathways for the source of evil - in the real world portals are formed at some designated time and coordinates. The reality that is constantly interfered by the almost-multi-dimensional space; the distorted time; and the grotesque deformation of the portal when the characters cross among spaces, all become the inspiration of the texture and the structure of the season, all of which are translated into multi-layered deconstruction and patchwork; this season's 3D twisted sculptural print is a descendant of the series' surreal artistic expression.

In the universe of Twin Peaks, one has a unique soul yet no longer possess one single physical form. "Dream of time and space but Who's the dreamer?"
